Winn ACH-Service Before Self: Ethical Responsibility in Military Work (2.0 clock hours)

Course Description: This continuing education activity explores ethical responsibility in military mental health settings, with a focus on navigating the unique challenges clinicians face when serving active-duty service members and military-connected families. Participants examine common ethical grey areas in military clinical work, including dual roles, overlapping systems of care, confidentiality obligations, and duty-to-warn considerations. The activity provides practical frameworks for balancing clinical obligations with military requirements without compromising professional and ethical standards. Emphasis is placed on maintaining appropriate boundaries, role clarity, and values-driven decision-making when policies, pressure, and real-world situations collide.
